Marek Tyrakowski, Financial Preferences Relating to the Activity of a Public Benefit Organization

Summary

Financial preferences, which are established by the government, are one of the widely accepted methods of financing public benefit organizations. Their main purpose is to achieve statutory goals of such organizations, which are generally public tasks. Financial preferences include income tax exemption for legal entities, property tax exemption, donations based on income tax laws, etc. Worth mentioning is the fact that tax exemptions and donations are most profitable.
